

Disclosure of Factories

Reebok uses approximately 800 factories in 53 countries to make its products. The names and addresses of factories producing Reebok products are posted here as a small part of our process of promoting good factory workplace conditions. Since some of the factories we use will change frequently to reflect business needs, this list will not be fully accurate at any one time.

The disclosure of factory names and addresses is a pre-requisite to sharing additional non-competitive information between brands and retailers to enhance the effectiveness of company efforts to ensure good workplace conditions. This information can include the level of compliance and remediation at a factory. We hope that sharing of factory information can minimize the unnecessary and unproductive duplication of factory audits.

To create the opportunity for broad sharing, Reebok helped found the Fair Factories Clearinghouse (FFC), a not-for-profit organization dedicated to supporting workplace compliance through the sharing of factory audit and remediation information. Reebok donated its human rights tracking system to the FFC, which acts as a foundation for a secure, web-based information management system that allows participating companies to track, manage and share factory lists and detailed factory compliance data. This is the first not-for-profit initiative of its kind developed through the collaborative efforts of retailers, consumer brands, and trade associations. For more information, see www.fairfactories.org.

We hope that the disclosure of factory names and locations promotes sharing and collaboration in a way that can improve workplace conditions and further protect the rights of workers.
